Education

- 2014 Ph.D. in Philosophy, Northwestern University, Evanston IL, USA; defended and approved July 14; conferred September 5
- Dissertation: Intentionality, Determinacy, and Rules: Kripke's Paradox and the Normativity of Intentional Content
 - Committee: Dr. Sanford Goldberg, Chester D. Tripp Professor in the Humanities, Department of Philosophy, Northwestern University (chair); Dr. Michael Glanzberg, Professor of Philosophy (currently of Rutgers University [NJ]); Dr. Mark Alznauer, Associate Professor of Philosophy, Northwestern University
 - Description: The dissertation makes three significant contributions to philosophy of mind and language. Part I offers two new answers to Kripke's famous skeptical argument that words and thoughts have no content. First, the skepticism may presuppose (falsely) that the subject must possess a guiding mental state that specifies the correct use of an intentional content in every possible case; instead, she merely needs some knowledge of the content availed by basic rationality. Second, even if Kripke makes no such false presupposition (and he may not), content's role in explaining thought and action permits explainers to presuppose, pace Kripke, that subjects mean and think things. Part II defends a controversial position on the related issue of the relationship between rules and minds—the fact that a subject possesses a conceptual content entails rules for how she ought to judge with it.
